A Whole New Light

A father and his daughter were once able to find common ground in discussions that reached across their differences. Years later, that relationship has inspired a space where similar conversations can flourish.

On our cover: A space that may radically change perspectives on critical issues has, itself, undergone a remarkable recent transformation.

People Matter

No matter what the advances in technology, it’s still the people who shake the hands, make the decisions and dream up the ideas that make any organization hum. St. Norbert students who study the management of human resources tend to gain a particularly valuable perspective.

Shepherding change, shaping growth

Edward J. Lamm took up his appointment as vice president for enrollment management and communications July 1. As St. Norbert's executive director of admission (since 2009) and, later, as associate vice president, he presided over the admission of the college's largest (in 2010), highest academically profiled (in 2013) and most diverse (in 2013) classes ever. A graduate of Lawrence University, Lamm holds a master's in management from North Park University. He formerly led the admissions offices of Robert Morris and Central Methodist universities.

This past August, I had the honor of being the carpool driver for my oldest son and two of his friends on their first day of high school. My wife was pleased. She reasoned it would be hazardous for her to drive while weeping uncontrollably.

It seems every stage of my children's growth and development is bittersweet. First steps. First word. First time riding a bike. First day of kindergarten. As a parent I applaud their independence or newly learned skill, but as a daddy I mourn the loss of their innocence or dependence on my help. And I remember vividly every moment in which I said goodbye and hello simultaneously.

As humans, it seems we are continually welcoming change and yet feeling apprehensive about where it may take us. Over the summer I began my own transition to my new role as vice president for enrollment management and communications. I was, and continue to be, excited about the opportunities and future at St. Norbert College. What an amazing time to be part of this campus – a place with unparalleled momentum in high-quality enrollment; incredible faculty; new and expanded programming to enhance the student experience; new buildings, new playing fields and new classrooms with the latest available technology.

It's amazing to me that during the entire time since I first set foot on this campus in 2009, bulldozers, cranes and men in hard hats have been regular features on our campus tour for prospective students. The physical transformation has been absolutely incredible to watch.

But with all these transitions come additional questions. How do we maintain and honor our traditions amidst all this change? How do we continue this momentum? What's next?

In my own life, I trust that God has his guiding and protecting hand in the lives of my children, knowing that his love and concern for each of them is immense. Similarly, since 1898, the St. Norbert community has entrusted our campus to the guiding hand of the Norbertine order. Their love for our college drives all decisions, challenging us to new initiatives and programs while honoring and embracing our past. And, although we administrators lack omniscient knowledge, the college is in good hands indeed. Every decision we make, we make for the benefit of our current students and our alumni. We know that parents have trusted us to educate, encourage, challenge and motivate their precious children as they grow into adults – adults who, like our alums, will lead business, spearhead research, inspire with performance, teach children.

Every August, the new intake of students arrives on campus, vehicles stuffed with belongings. They are quickly surrounded by Kunkel's Krew – members of our campus community who are ready to ease the newcomers' burdens (quite literally) as we help move the students into the residence halls. What a great symbol of what St. Norbert is all about!

College is a major transition for parents and students; it brings with it great excitement and many more questions. But the St. Norbert faculty and staff are committed to walking alongside students as they journey through the next four years. We greet them and help them move into the halls. We cheer for them as they process into their first academic convocation. We pray with them and for them at Common Prayer. We guide them in their studies. We celebrate with them four years later when they walk across the stage at Commencement.

Their success is our success and their presence on our campus has been a present to us. For as much as we hope to give to our students, we know they have given us a great gift, as they in their turn challenge and encourage us. The best reward they give us is a glimpse into their next transition – their future – as they move forward to change the world.

BANNER IDEA

A future you can see

The banners now visible on the mall emphasize, in turn, three critical goals of Campaign St. Norbert: Full Ahead

- To create opportunity
- To foster excellence
- To educate fully

Gifts to the campaign will provide financial aid for students; strengthen faculty and academic programs; enrich the student experience; and enhance campus facilities. The fifth initiative, to create a new facility for the natural sciences, is already bearing fruit: $35 million has been raised toward the $39-million Gehl-Mulva Science Center. Construction workers "topped out" the building earlier this fall. The science center is planned to fully open in summer 2015.

As the comprehensive campaign to raise $90 million by 2016 enters its pivotal new phase, early successes are already evident on campus. Now, the campaign initiative itself is acquiring some curb appeal.

Thoughtfully designed lamppost banners along the mall and a mural on the side of the Bush Arts Center make it evident to the world – or that part of the world that passes by on Third Street – that St. Norbert has its fiscally responsible eye on a future with excellence as its hallmark.

Outcomes from Campaign St. Norbert: Full Ahead may not be labeled as such but some are already evident in bricks-and-mortar projects completed or underway: Michels Commons, the Welcome Center and the Cassandra Voss Center, for instance, and not least the 150,000-square-foot Gehl-Mulva Science Center (GMS) now taking shape in the northeast corner of campus.

With financial support for GMS now well on track, the emphasis of the campaign pivots from funding the new science center to completing fundraising for the other priorities identified when the campaign launched in 2009.

"Campaign St. Norbert: Full Ahead is about removing hurdles from the paths in front of today's SNC community," says Phil Oswald (College Advancement), who has steered the initiative to its current $75 million mark. "Equipping our campus with the Gehl-Mulva Science Center removes one hurdle and endowing scholarships removes the hurdle of affordability for our students and their families. Both are important; funding GMS nears completion but now we need to focus on endowing financial aid for needy and meritorious students.

"Scholarships are not just something in the abstract. You can see it in every student who walks campus, who studies at Mulva Library, who steps up to give back to their community. Real. Curious. Alive. Studious. Athletic. Inquisitive. SNC students, and the college that inspires them, need the entire SNC community, most especially our alumni and friends, to build a clear path for their future ... and ours."

This fall the campaign increases its visibility on campus in another dimension, too: Nov. 5 was the launch date of All Aboard, the faculty/staff fundraising effort within the campaign. A student campaign follows. Oswald says the philanthropic support of any institution's own constituents (its employees, its alumni and even the modest contributions of its current students and newest grads) is critically important – not least because such support evidences good faith and commitment on the part of those who know the institution most intimately.

Bridging the gap

Leadership, service and international travel combine in a new program particularly relevant for college-bound students looking for some time to discern their direction in life.

St. Norbert's Gap Experience, built around off-campus locations for an alternative first semester, launches with the 2014-15 academic year. It is specifically designed for highly motivated students looking to transition into college life while earning college credit.

Gap Experience students will travel with staff and faculty to various sites throughout Canada and the United States, as well as to the island of St. Lucia. Their gap semester will begin at an outdoor leadership site along the Canadian shore of Lake Superior, where sea-kayaking and backpacking will be among the offerings. Students will then visit four different United States locations, working with service organizations to help those in need. Their semester will end with a six-week international service experience in St. Lucia.

A J-Term class and an on-campus spring semester will round out the full first year at St. Norbert College.

"We recognize that students come to college with different experiences and expectations," says President Tom Kunkel. "This will be an attractive alternative point of entry to St. Norbert for a certain number of them. The program will be a journey of self-discovery, even as it helps prepare these students for college work and life."

Unlike many gap programs, the St. Norbert experience, now recruiting, will earn students college credit and is designed to ensure that participants in the program will, along with their peers, earn sophomore status by the end of the first academic year.

Shared

St. Norbert played host to faculty members from Nihon University-Mishima for a two-day symposium in September. The two institutions share a longstanding partnership and this joint venture takes place every two or three years. The conference was chaired by Ikuko Torimoto and Tom Conner (Modern Languages and Literatures), with Jamie O'Brien (Business Administration), Ed Risden (English), Marc Shaffer (Economics) and Wayne Patterson (History) presenting alongside their Japanese counterparts.

Cataloged

A new look at "the father of American illustration" will prove a significant contribution to scholarship, not least because of the scholarly catalog accompanying "Howard Pyle in Wisconsin." The exhibition runs on campus Dec. 2-Feb. 7. The Baer Gallery show traces the checkered history of a collection of paintings by Pyle that arrived in Green Bay in 1904. Like the exhibit itself, the catalog – the first created for a St. Norbert exhibit – is made possible by a $20,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts. Designed by Brian Pirman (Art) and Julia Muscarello '14, the piece includes an essay by Heather Campbell, curator of American art at the Delaware Art Museum. Gallery curator Shan Bryan-Hanson (Art) and Sally Cubitt (Library) have also contributed.

Understood

The true student-athletes are to be found in Division III, assert the presidents of two Midwest Conference rivals in an op-ed piece for the Wisconsin State Journal. "None of our students receives athletic scholarships. Even though dreams die hard, no one has a realistic hope of making it in the National Football League. Put another way, on our campuses you can still use the term 'student-athlete' with pride, not irony," say Presidents Tom Kunkel of St. Norbert and Zach Messitte of Ripon College.

"When our football players line up at St. Norbert's Schneider Stadium or Ripon's Ingalls

Examined

A recent trip to the Driftless Area of southwestern Wisconsin showed geology majors that the processes they study may sometimes take millennia to make their mark, sometimes just a few decades. They saw how the geology of a region intersects with human history – and how their chosen field has a remarkable scholarly history of its own. snc.edu/magazine

Field, you see the real deal. Students first, athletes second. Take, for example, Ripon defensive back Luke Morgan, a senior biology major from Cedarburg. Luke practices hard all week and makes interceptions on Saturday, but he also knows his professors by name. Or St. Norbert running back Brad Boockmeier, a sophomore from Green Bay, who managed to achieve both the dean's list and All-America status as a decathlete. Ripon and St. Norbert players give back to their communities as well, and not just for a feel-good photo op, but because it is part of their course of study. ... ESPN won't be in De Pere for our football game. For the players on the field, the parents in the stands and the thousands of alumni from both schools around the country, the game is still important. What's more important, however, is being in class on Monday." snc.edu/go/wsj-op-ed

Kathy (Wagner) Muhs joined the St. Norbert faculty in 1982. She treasures her Geek Clock particularly because it was a gift from her four children. The apple does not fall far from the tree. All four are mathematically inclined and, indeed, have chosen careers in which they depend on mathematical principles or statistical data: Paul '01, in marketing, for a company that does computer imaging of diamonds; Scott, an engineer with his degree from Marquette; Kevin, another engineer with his master's from MIT; and Rachel '12, currently working on her Masters in Social Work at University of Wisconsin – Milwaukee.

Kathy (Wagner) Muhs '73
Assistant Professor of Mathematics

It's hard to decide on my favorite time of day, but I think it might be seven o'clock. Or perhaps it's five ... These days, I keep time by mathematical symbols, thanks to the clock that hangs opposite my desk.

It attracts plenty of comments. Prospective students tend to get pretty excited about it, especially because they recognize some of the math. There is at least one notation that everyone can get: That's three factorial, or  $3*2*1 = 6$  (at 6 o'clock).

Eight o'clock is expressed in the binary system. Isn't that cool? Three o'clock is in ASCII notation – my colleague Bonnie McVey '82 (Computer Science) was able to explain that one to me.

And there's one time of day that I don't understand myself – yet. I know that one o'clock is Legendre's Constant, which relates to prime numbers. I looked up the formula, and I accept it – but I can't show that it works out. One day I will spend some more time with it! There is so much about math that any mathematician may not know. But the great thing about math is that once something is proven, it cannot be unproven.

I do particularly like seven o'clock. Seven o'clock illustrates the density of mathematics; that 6.99 repeating infinitely is really the same number as 7. It's the most elegant notation on the clock, I think, and it's philosophical as well as mathematical.

Five o'clock relates to the golden ratio that occurs so frequently in art. The proportions of the Parthenon depend on it, and the proportions of the human body do, too. The golden ratio is an irrational number – it never stops and is non-repeating, like  $\pi$  or the square root of 2. It is represented by the symbol  $\phi$ .

Actually, I really like most of the notations on my clock. There's such beauty to the proofs in mathematics – to be able to go from here to there, with nice logical reasoning all the way. You can work through something from multiple directions and you'll always end up in the same spot. I knew early on that math was for me. I love the fact that you can always arrive at a "right answer."

RECONCILERS

Sibling peacebuilders honored

Ambassador of Peace Award

Honoring its founding saint, Norbert of Xanten, and his legacy of reconciliation, each year St. Norbert College recognizes an individual who similarly demonstrates the qualities of a peacemaker: respect for persons, promotion of dialogue, nonviolent conflict resolution, reconciliation and forgiveness. Past recipients of the award include Sister Helen Prejean, C.S.J. (whose work was portrayed in "Dead Man Walking") and the Hon. Janine Geske, advocate for restorative justice.

His decades of service were made possible by the many who supported him along the way, says the Rev. Jack MacCarthy, O.Praem., '67.

The Rev. Dr. Jack MacCarthy, O.Praem., '67

Peggy and Chuck MacCarthy

This year, for the first time ever, the prestigious St. Norbert Ambassador of Peace Award is shared by three honorees. Bob Pyne (Miller Center), who chairs the selection committee, explains how the generosity of one peacemaker led to the recognition of a family's multiple efforts in the name of peace.

Last spring, Connor Romenesko '15, one of my interns at the Norman Miller Center for Peace, Justice & Public Understanding, nominated the Rev. Dr. Jack MacCarthy, O.Praem., '67 for this year's St. Norbert Ambassador of Peace Award. Our selection committee enthusiastically affirmed the choice. The award honors an individual who has been an influential advocate for sustainable peace in our world, and that Father Jack has certainly been. A physician and a Norbertine, he has served faithfully for decades at a jungle hospital in Peru, 180 miles from the nearest road. Healing the sick and advocating for the poor, he exemplifies the qualities of a peacebuilder, and we were delighted to invite him to receive the award.

Father Jack's response made us appreciate him even more. By email, he thanked us for the honor, but humbly suggested that we give it instead to his older brother Chuck and Chuck's wife, Peggy. Founders of the Good News Project, for the last 30 years Chuck and Peggy have provided humanitarian support to communities in the West Indies and medical equipment to families in north central Wisconsin – work in which Father Jack has himself been involved when political circumstances have driven him from his work in Peru. They have mobilized hundreds of short-term volunteers, many of them our own students. (In fact, Connor was one of those volunteers, serving with Chuck and Peggy in St. Lucia.) Rather than choose between the MacCarthys, could we recognize all three of them with this year's award? This would be a first, but it sounded like a great idea to us and Father Jack was enthusiastic, too.

As part of our assessment of student initiatives, we track their combined hours of service. With the MacCarthy family, we would have to track years, or perhaps decades. Father Jack, Chuck and Peggy have given their entire adult lives to transforming communities and helping those in need.

I meet lots of people who are deeply involved in peacebuilding. They work to establish the community relationships and infrastructure required for sustainable peace, often in post-conflict or severely underdeveloped regions. Peacebuilding calls for "all hands on deck." When communities need everything in order to flourish, every person's contribution is vital. But such work is arduous, often requiring an unusual measure of perseverance. I asked Father Jack how he has been able to stay with it for so long.

One story captured the nature of his ministry. Early in his work at Santa Clotilde, he said, he saved the life of a young girl. Years later he officiated at her wedding, and later still, delivered her babies. Now those kids greet him in the street, and he said, "That really feels good."

Chuck and Peggy have the same kinds of stories, and that is why we are so glad to honor all three MacCarthys.

Involved!

Across the board, so many ways to engage at St. Norbert! Miles Lamensky '14, "Philosophy Club president, Writing Center consultant, SNC Times op-ed writer and squirrel enthusiast," was one of many drawn to the Taste of SNC Involvement Fair. This annual event, held early each fall, sees renewed vigor among student orgs of long standing, plus a crop of new interests emerging.

Students signing up for new groups hope for fun, friendships and deeper connections. snc.edu/magazine

Next of kin: a scholarly shift in focus

On the first day of each semester, I introduce myself to my students as a lifelong learner who has changed the direction of her life many times. Indeed, I worked as a waitress, secretary, director of purchasing and inventory control and certified ski instructor before turning college professor. I'm a better historian for these experiences. And now, I've also changed my scholarly focus; this Latin Americanist, a specialist in late colonial Chilean merchants and their families, is now turning her attention to a microhistory of an independent, adventuresome Southern woman of the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Like almost all change, this one was sparked by historical circumstances and individual acts. One gloomy day late in an endless Wisconsin winter, a colleague asked me, "Do you really have to publish your dissertation?" Such heresy! Publishing their dissertations is what historians do! But no, of course, I didn't have to publish it. In fact, circumstances suggested a better course.

In every one of my "careers," fads and fashions have exerted their influence and, sooner or later, yielded to new ones. In academia, social history, of which my dissertation is an example, had become passé. Cultural history was "in." Having milked the dissertation dry of articles, I was dead tired of studying merchants. I never even taught my field of specialization; the contagious enthusiasm of my students for Cuban and Mexican history had taken me in that direction instead. Moreover, I was concerned about the costs in time and money of research in Chile and Spain.

I was also strongly pulled toward what I now call "The Grandma Stannie Project." After a lifetime of intending to record her marvelous stories of life in Montgomery, Ala., at the turn of the 20th century, I would now write an honest-to-goodness professional microhistory of my grandmother, a biography of a single individual that illuminates the history of the times. Its scope embraces race and class relations, especially in the Jim Crow era; the suffrage movement; migration; women's education and new organizations (e.g., the YWCA and Camp Fire Girls); World War I and the War Work Council; and various topics related to family life that include alcoholism and divorce, the tuberculosis sanatorium, twins and clairvoyance, food, railroads, travel and car culture.

Having pursued the historical study of kinship networks, women and race as a Latin Americanist, I believed that I could learn enough U.S. history to pull off this new book project. Like most professors at liberal arts colleges,

I'd become a generalist, with training, skills, knowledge and interests that would serve me well in the new project, as would my comparative perspective. And although academe pulsates with turf wars, my open-minded colleagues approved my new project, and the associate dean encouraged me to go forward. The new research proved to be even more exciting (and safer) than heady days spent in the Chilean National Archives.

In addition to stories and memories, serious history requires additional documentation. Grandma Stannie loved history and had saved boxes of photos and documents including letters, certificates, deeds, contracts and a diary. There were family and friends to consult, too – but I had been out of touch with my Southern relatives for decades. How would they respond when I asked for help?

Cousin Ted welcomed me with open arms, spoiled me with Southern hospitality, and facilitated my work. He involved other family members, including cousin Boots, the repository of family and local history and a talented storyteller. Ted also led the way in reconciling Boots with his once-favorite cousin, my difficult father, thus bringing the Southern and Yankee sides of the family back together.

So, personally speaking, I gained a family, as well as new insights into the family I thought I knew. And, while it may sometimes feel as if I've just changed obstacles (from a military dictatorship to family dynamics), this shift in my professional focus has been exciting, intellectually reinvigorating and rewarding.

Marti Lamar (History) received her doctorate from the University of Texas at Austin. Her work in Latin American history has included substantial study of late-colonial women.

Educating with special intent

Bob Osgood (Teacher Education) has been on the road for special education, throughout a scholarly summer that has taken him to Indonesia, Latvia – and Dayton, Ohio.

Since 2005 he has studied how autism is viewed and addressed in Indonesia, in partnership with the psychology department at Gadjah Mada University at Yogyakarta. A faculty development summer research grant enabled him to return to Indonesia in May.

Although inclusive schools (where children with disabilities learn alongside children not considered disabled) are the law in Indonesia, limited resources along with training and preference for another model have made the policy a struggle, Osgood says. "[Indonesian educators] believe that a child with autism learns best in an environment that resembles the home and the family as much as possible. As a result, a lot of children with autism in Yogyakarta attend a very small private school that is basically run by parents who have more training in working with children with autism than many teachers do in Indonesia."

Osgood, now in his third year as chair of teacher education at St. Norbert, presented a paper on the team's findings at the Ohio Philosophy of Education Society in September.

A month earlier, he had traveled to Latvia to join a four-person panel at the International Standing Conference on the History of Education. He presented with the same panel last year in Geneva.

"This is important not only for my own research agenda, but it is also very important for the teaching that I do here. What I'm learning overseas, what I'm learning from my research on history, is very easily incorporated into my classes," Osgood says. "It's critical that the research you do is integrated with good teaching because good teaching creates good research. Good research creates better teaching, and it's a lovely circle."

Osgood was first introduced to special education as an undergraduate at Antioch College, where he and his fellows were able to work intensively with children with autism and behavioral disorders. He went on to receive a Ph.D. in education from the Claremont Graduate School. His dissertation was a history of special education in Boston Public Schools, starting with the opening in 1838 of the School for Special Instruction for immigrant children who could not read or write English.

The Rev. Conrad Kratz, O.Praem., '70

The college mourns the death of the Rev. Conrad Kratz, O.Praem., '70. Kratz served as pastor of the college 1982-89, and as director of campus ministry. He was later named the founding pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes. Kratz most recently served as director of the Norbertine Center for Spirituality. Julie Massey '87

recalls: "Each student here felt he cared for and about them, felt they had a welcome place in the community he shepherded. He had a playful spirit that reflected the deep joy claimed by a man of faith, a faith that doesn't deny sadness but knows hope triumphs. Some 30 years after he became pastor on campus, I still hear colleagues talk about how Father Conrad welcomed them into this community. Now I realize we call that radical hospitality. At the time I called it Father Conrad."

Don Henrickson

Longtime faculty member Don Henrickson (Business Administration, Emeritus), of De Pere, died Sept. 22 at the age of 74. Henrickson served on the faculty for nearly 30 years. He became discipline coordinator in 1974 and received the Community Service Award in 1994. Kevin Quinn (Economics) remembers, "He was engaged, vibrant and couldn't have been more dedicated to his students." And Dave Wegge (Political Science) adds: "He was a 'salt of the earth' kind of guy with strong Midwestern values. Family, God and work were the touchstones of the Don that I knew." Henrickson is survived by his wife, Judy (formerly of the Children's Center), and his children Eric, Marc and Jill Hackel '99.

A Whole New Light

A father and daughter were once able to find common ground in discussions that reached across their differences. Years later, that relationship has inspired a space where similar conversations can flourish.

Kurt Voss and Karlyn Crowley inside the new Cassandra Voss Center. Voss holds a photograph of his daughter, whose passion for women's and gender studies the center celebrates.

Cassandra Voss '08 added a personal touch to her profile page when she served at the Joan P. Schaupp Women's Center on the St. Norbert College campus. Instead of "likes" and "dislikes," Cassandra listed several "passions" and a few items classified as "not interested in." "She didn't simply like something," explains her father, Kurt Voss. "If she had a positive feeling about something, she was passionate about it."

Gender, relationships, talking about feminism, art, being in love, dancing, yoga, movies that change your life and writing confessional poetry were among Cassandra's passions.

"When you think about it, to wake up every morning and have 30-some things you are passionate about and five things you are not interested in is a pretty good outlook on life," says Kurt. "Just think what people would accomplish if that's the outlook they had. To know that is to know my daughter."

Through Cassandra's convictions she and her father – "just a conservative white guy" – continued to find common ground. Kurt says, "She became such a spokesperson that she could outdebate a pretty good debater – her father – and teach her father in such a way that her father could know and understand."

In May 2007, Cassandra died in an automobile accident. Her spirit, legacy and many of her passions live on through the new Cassandra Voss Center, which opened this fall in the renovated St. John's Hall building at 311 Grant Street.

"This isn't supposed to be a monument," says Kurt. "The center is supposed to be a facilitator of many neat things and fulfilling things for students, educators and the community."

Cassandra was the first St. Norbert College student to major in women's and gender studies. Outside the classroom, she served as student director at the women's center, researched gender issues and facilitated programs. Cassandra also presented academic work at different venues, including the National Women's Studies Association Conference.

The Cassandra Voss Center, steward of the largest gift total ever dedicated to gender programming on a college campus, now houses the Joan P. Schaupp Women's Center, the Men's Initiative and the women's & gender studies discipline.

What separates the building from similar centers on other campuses is the integration of co-curricular women's and men's programming. How gender intersects with social justice, relationships and communities will be among the focus areas, says Anna Czarnik-Neimeyer '11, assistant director of the center. "Multiple levels of identity cross over with gender, not just women's or men's," she says. "How does gender combine with race and class? We know that those all play into identity and how issues are played out."

"Programming at the center will be education-driven, but it can also be fun," says Karlyn Crowley (English, Women's & Gender Studies), center director for its inaugural two years. "We make gender fun because it is fun," she says. "I think there will be a playfulness, a sense of irony. We will deal with heavy subjects like sexuality and violence prevention – which are not always easy on a Catholic campus, but our students need it. We need to have frank discussions."

Kurt has fond memories of gender-related conversations with his daughter.

"We would meet for breakfast and I would ask, 'What did you learn in class?' We spent a lot of time discussing feminism, the definition," he explains. "My definition, previously to being exposed to her teaching, had negative connotations. We spent a lot of time around that, which was cool. She taught me so much."

If the center serves as a place for "empowerment and transformation," it will honor Cassandra's passions, says Crowley. The design of the former St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church fits Cassandra's sense of style," she adds.

"The building mirrors Cassandra's sensibility," says Crowley. "She was artistic and had a beautiful eye. We used to joke about vintage clothing all the time. She was somebody who had a great aesthetic sense in her own dress and demeanor. She was very modern and retro simultaneously. She was very bold and a collaborator. Cassandra was an extraordinary person, innovative, joyous and hopeful."

The former church bell tower is now the "Reflection Room for Hope." The Rev. Jay Foster, O.Praem., '84 (Mission & Student Affairs), designed the small space, which includes a statue of Martha and Mary, and two benches.

"As with all new buildings, we want to include a component of our religious identity and mission," says Fostner. "Cassandra was a very positive person, full of life. Even through this tragedy of death, we reflect on the value of life."

The room mirrors Cassandra, says Kurt. "In my view, faith is about hope. God has revealed that even more over the past six years to me ... Cassandra had a lot of faith. She was figuring out the specifics and theology around that faith. She would want a room for people to have time to reflect and figure that out. She didn't want to have a hollow faith; she wanted a deep-seated faith."

Kurt led the $2.7 million funding effort for the project, the largest-ever total for gender programming at a college or university. A true "coalition of the willing," the completion of the project brought both excitement and reflection, he says. "We started with a dilapidated 130-year-old building that was transformed inside. There is an academic part of it. There are classrooms, space for teachers, potential office space for visiting scholars. The non-academic space includes a super-cool lounge, a kitchen, televisions on all levels. Special films will be shown on the main level. It's very collaborative in nature."

Programming for the debut year of the Cassandra Voss Center is imagined as "the year of bell hooks." A monthly program will honor the work of hooks, the author, feminist and social activist. Hooks, who has published more than 30 books and has done extensive research on gender, will visit St. Norbert in April.

To support future programming and visiting scholars, the center will explore grants and naming opportunities, says Czarnik-Neimeyer. Billy Korinko '09, consultant to the center and former director of the Men's Initiative, adds: "I think St. Norbert will be a leader in the entire state and country with this sort of work."

Kurt reflects often on what the center can accomplish, but his thoughts always return to his daughter.

"I think about my relationship with Cassie and the different things we debated and taught each other," he says. "[The center] is in some ways a fulfillment of that. It's a testimony to the college that they inspired a young woman to the point where she inspires her dad to make a difference." ♣

 The former St. John's Lutheran Church on Third Street, once home of the ROTC program and Residential Life, is now re-imagined for the next chapter in its varied life.

 Many hands were involved in the new center for gender and identity at St. Norbert College. But it was a father's will, and his love for his daughter, that turned tragedy into treasure.

From time to time, we're reminded of it in ways both simple and profound. For some, the insight occurs when a call center employee finally puts an end to all the needless transfers and resolves your issue. For others, the understanding settles in when remembering that teacher who, way back when, inspired your own career path. Or maybe it hits you during the holiday season while watching George Bailey realize that a seemingly ordinary life spent raising a family and working at the Bedford Falls' Building & Loan has, in fact, touched countless others in a wonderful way.

People matter, plain and simple. And regardless of the leaps and bounds made over the years in machinery, technology and automated processes, peel back the surface and it becomes clear that people remain the building blocks, the substance, the matter that constitutes the essence of just about any business or organization. We are still the ones shaking hands, making decisions and dreaming up the ideas that shape the landscape of not only the business world but our entire existence. We are still the ones who can change the trajectory of another's day or month or entire life with a single well-placed comment, thoughtful action or meticulously handled procedure. Yes, we do tend to have these occasional moments of revelation when we remember all over again just how important people really are, but it's human-resource professionals in particular who maintain an ongoing appreciation for the unparalleled power people hold within an organizational context.

Finding a fit

Students who study human resources at St. Norbert College tend to gain a particular perspective on their field by virtue of the college's heritage, says Matt Stollak (Business Administration). "The thing that gets students interested, and is most unique to the St. Norbert College mission and values, is the notion of helping individuals find vocation," he says. Because this is so central to the college's Norbertine tradition, Stollak has noticed that students tend to not only find their own career path but also help others develop their skills and careers within an organization.

Kaila Haen '14, who plans to graduate in December with a major in business administration and a concentration in human resource management, exemplifies this notion of discovering vocation and paying it forward. Once an accounting major, Haen began to sense that discipline wasn't the best fit for her and later experienced an awakening during an interview for an internship. "The whole time I would have given anything to be on the other side of the table," she says, which led her to an exploration of all things HR.

It was a journey that included discussion with Stollak, in his role as the faculty member with primary responsibility for teaching in the HR concentration, as well as coursework and involvement in the student chapter of the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM), all of which informed Haen's outlook on the field.

"I believe that employees are the biggest asset of a company," she says, explaining the importance of recruiting outstanding talent, implementing the training and development of that talent, and creating ways to keep employees satisfied in order to retain the very best.

As she enters her final semester of studies, Haen knows that she is particularly interested in the recruiting and onboarding areas of human resources. "The feeling of offering a job to a great candidate and watching that employee develop in their role is very rewarding," she notes, "and I think that's what sparked my interest in bringing people into a company and making them feel welcome."

Learning expanded

While Stollak teaches an array of business courses that include Compensation, Collective Bargaining and Organizational Behavior, his for-credit HR course is particularly remarkable. As far as he is aware, it is one of only two in the country to be built around participation, by undergraduates, at a national professional conference.

Over the course of roughly five days, students have the opportunity to attend sessions on a variety of topics, interact with vendors in a huge exhibit hall and listen to keynote speakers who, in recent years, have included notables like Hillary Clinton, Tom Brokaw and Sir Richard Branson. The SHRM conference also has plenty of fun and casual interaction built into it, including musical performances by big-name artists ranging from Sheryl Crow to Kelly Clarkson.

Following all the action, students travel back to campus and reflect on the experience. This type of experience helps both Stollak and his students remain well-informed within a field marked by constant change.

Stollak has also harnessed the power of social media to stay on top of the issues currently on the minds of human resource professionals. Following a nudge by his friend, HR professional and speaker Laurie Ruettimann, Stollak started a blog about four years ago. Ever since, True Faith HR (truefaithhr.blogspot.com) has become a vehicle for adding his own voice to the ongoing conversation.

"The primary reason I write it," says Stollak, "and get involved with it, and interact with many of the HR professionals, is to better guide the students – to better prepare them for when they actually go out and start working so that they're going to be on the cutting edge of many of the topics and issues that their soon-to-be peers are talking about."

Due in part to the success of his blog, Stollak has earned the role of an official blogger for SHRM. He joins another prominent figure involved with the organization – the recently appointed executive director of the SHRM foundation, Mark Schmit '90.

Schmit says his interest in HR matters was first kindled as a St. Norbert College student while taking courses in business and psychology. During an internship with Employers Health Insurance in De Pere, that initial interest ignited when an employee encouraged Schmit to go on to graduate school. There he studied industrial and organizational psychology, which looks at the intersection of business and psychology along with its application through HR. Since that time, Schmit has been in or around the HR profession in multiple ways, including a teaching stint at the University of Florida Business School and 15 years of consulting work. And now his involvement with SHRM builds off those years of experience.

"I joined SHRM as a way to give back to the Kaila Haen '14 experienced an awakening during an interview for an internship. "The whole time I would have given anything to be on the other side of the table," she says, which led her to an exploration of all things HR.

In his blog, True Faith HR: Creating a New Order Between HR Theory & Practice, Matt Stollak often draws on popular culture for analogies and even examples of good and bad practice in the profession. snc.edu/magazine profession, a profession that has been very good to me in my career," Schmit says. He began as the head of research and transitioned this past year to head of the foundation. "It's really fulfilling my mission in life as well," he adds.

St. Norbert's student branch of SHRM is impacting future leaders of the HR world in much the same way. With Stollak as adviser, the group has seen remarkable success in recent years. Stollak's students have been to the National HR Games Championship three times, including a victory at the National Championship in 2003. This year, St. Norbert's SHRM was named one of 10 Outstanding Student Chapters out of 450.

Jenna Ray Hines '13 is one of the many students for whom SHRM has made a difference. "Getting involved in SHRM was another big step in piquing my curiosity and kind of pointing me in the direction that I wanted to go," she says. Hines first began by attending biweekly meetings. She then attended a handful of conferences and became involved in student competitions. During her senior year, she was elected president of the SNC chapter, at which time she attended Green Bay professional chapter meetings and invited HR professionals to come to St. Norbert and share their knowledge.

"I had a lot of interest and I really wanted to try to help our chapter grow," Hines says. "And we had quite a few younger members, so I wanted to make sure they had opportunities to network within the community."

While still a student, Hines interned with Schreiber Foods, had the chance to explore departments and possible job options within the company, and even had her current position as a talent acquisition coordinator lined up before graduation rolled around.

"I really enjoy working with the candidates, working with our new hires, and just kind of getting to see their excitement for their roles and excitement for the company," she says. "I love being able to sell the image of Schreiber and to sell who we are and really express that to the community and to our new candidates."

Personal touch preserved

The St. Norbert human resources department offers internship experiences, too. They provide a first-hand look at the field right on campus.

Mindy Leiterman (Human Resources) wants to make sure that students have an opportunity to express what they hope to gain from the internship right from the get-go. Learning objectives are established in collaboration with the campus career services office to help meet these expectations. "The main goal is to have them graduate and have a really good understanding of the HR field, and lots of experience, so that they can hopefully get a position right away when they graduate," Leiterman says.

She also notes that interns tend to bring a fresh approach to the table, so she encourages students to provide suggestions for improvement or to approach staff members if there's a desire to start a new project or initiative within the office.

Current HR intern Carley Milbrath '14 is in her second year with the department. She says, "They do a great job of getting me involved in everything and every side of HR, which is what I really like – along with more responsibility as time goes on."

And what does the future look like for the field as incoming professionals like Milbrath join current HR practitioners in collectively looking ahead?

Despite plenty of unknowns, Leiterman suspects that part of the evolution will continue to involve growth in technology usage, and she is excited to embrace that aspect and its many benefits. Even so, she believes that's all the more reason to hold onto that personal touch that has always been at the heart of her profession. ♣

The View From the Top

Appointed executive director of the Society for Human Resource Management Foundation last fall, his new position places Mark Schmit '90 at the helm of the fundraising and educational arm of the national organization for human resource professionals. Previously Schmit served the foundation's parent organization as vice president of research, providing strategic leadership for the society's survey and research programs. Before joining SHRM, he was western regional vice president at APTMetrics in Denver. Schmit earned his doctorate and master's degrees in industrial and organizational psychology from Bowling Green State University after majoring in psychology at St. Norbert. Speaking here with our contributor Paul Nicolaus '05, Schmit reflects on the current research agenda for the profession of human resources.

Q: At its core human resources is about ...

A: ... It's about helping organizations put in place people-management strategies that positively impact both the business and the people in the organization.

Q: How would you describe the Society for Human Resource Management and its foundation?

A: The Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) is a membership organization for people who are in HR, and we provide educational experiences for them as well as content and resources to help them do their job. We are also an advocate: We represent the profession both in a governmental kind of an arena but also from a public relations standpoint.

Q: What is the foundation's role?

A: The SHRM Foundation is a subsidiary or an affiliate of SHRM, and we are the nonprofit charity arm, so in other words we can accept tax-deductible donations, and we use that money then to fund HR research. Generally, it's academics who make proposals to us. We help identify the kind of needs for HR, we build a research agenda around that, and then we find academic researchers who are pursuing studies in those areas so that the tools and solutions HR people are going to need five or 10 years from now are ready when those issues hit. The other thing we do is we give scholarships, so helping fund undergraduate and graduate students as well as professional certification.

Q: So the foundation serves as a catalyst?

A: I believe that the foundation is on a solid path to being among the most preeminent thought-leader organizations in the field of HR. Right now we're doing a major project with The Economist Intelligence Unit; they are a subsidiary of The Economist magazine, a publishing group. Really what they have access to is a panel of over 100,000 C-suite executives – CEOs and CFOs and so forth – from around the world, and we can tap into this panel to understand what the coming business issues are ... As a profession we tend to have a limited view of that top because we're seeing it from the HR perspective only, but this study that we're doing with them will help us see it not only from the HR perspective but from the perspective of executives around the world.

We also work with academic institutes and consulting firms to help educate them on what are the coming issues so that they, too, can start to invest in the future. In that way we are the catalyst behind multiple streams of solutions for HR folks. Whether it's through academics or through consulting firms, think tanks, you name it, we try to drive our research agenda through all of those avenues. That way everybody is working on the same problems and we come up with different perspectives and different solutions for those problems.

Q: What's next?

A: I think that the most exciting thing for me is the project that we're doing with The Economist Intelligence Unit to identify future business trends that will impact talent-management kinds of programs. The reason that is exciting to me is that we're being very proactive about that in order to try to set up solutions well in advance of the need for HR folks, and for me that's something where we can have an impact, and can leave a legacy because of that impact. We have the funds to be able to do that, and we have the people to be able to do that.

Performance Review

St. Norbert College's student SHRM chapter is one of only 10 student chapters, out of more than 450 in the nation, to be honored with the Outstanding Chapter Award by the Society for Human Resource Management. The award was conferred this summer at the organization's annual conference in Chicago. The St. Norbert group has earned the Superior Merit Award for each of the past 10 years. This award recognizes student chapter achievements and a commitment to providing meaningful programs and services. Some 20 students are involved in the chapter, with Matthew Stollak (Business Administration) serving as the adviser and Kaila Haen '14 as president. Stollak's students have been to the National HR Games Championship three times, winning the National Championship in 2003.

The New Normal

Wanting to unpack the student experience, 2013-style, we realized we were in the midst of 2,159 undergraduates who carried that very thing around with them on a daily basis. So we went to the mother lode: the backpack. It contains the essentials our students need to acquire knowledge, record it, assimilate it, disseminate it – and then take a break from it. Their tasks are the same as yours were, dear reader – it's only the tools that have changed.

Student planner

Perhaps the most surprising find in our 2013 backpack. Most all of you carry them: "If it's important, you want it on paper."

Backpack

It has to be sturdy, comfortable, stylish. Today's backpacks come fully laptop- and cellphone-compatible, with pockets for all your technology.

Hand sanitizer

Someone in the group will have some at hand. You're all living at close quarters – sharing rooms, sharing workstations. No need to share the same cold!

Laptop

You'll probably own a laptop, like 99 percent of your classmates who responded to our IT survey. 20 percent own a tablet, too – but it's your laptop that you take to class. It's a note-taker as well as a gateway to the college's virtual learning environment – a collaborative space where professors upload course overviews, assignments, podcasts, videos and more.

Fresh fruit

Like many of your friends, you're eating healthier these days. Bonus at the Caf: Fruit is always available as a free carryout item. Dining Services serves up more than 3,500 pounds of fresh fruit every week. Menus always include vegetarian and vegan options, too, to meet an increasing demand.

Gum

Important study aid: You believe gum helps you stay awake – and focused. "If you chew a certain flavor while you study for a test, then chew the same flavor during the test itself, the stuff you learned will come back to you."

Coffee

The White Squirrel is today's choice of pick-me-up from Ed's, the coffee shop in the library. Named for a beloved former campus resident, this white chocolate-hazelnut latte boasts whipped cream and a chocolate-covered espresso bean.

Lanyard & ID

Your swipe card is how you pay for your meals, do laundry – even get discounts at local merchants. It gets you into your res hall, too. But you still need a key for your room.

Water bottle

Nearly 20 percent of you play on a varsity team; 35 percent play intramurals. Stay hydrated!

Smart phone & tunes

"My whole life is in this phone." It's alarm clock, entertainment system, Facebook portal, e-mail hub, camera, address book, music library – "every moment has its soundtrack." It lets you call people, too!

Textbooks

Rent them for savings around 50 percent; buy them used – and sell them back later; even buy the e-book.

Car keys

If you're one of the 895 students who keep a car on campus, you'll pay $100 for your parking permit this year – but you can ride the Green Bay Metro bus system for free with your student ID.

The Inside Story

By Lisa Strandberg

Anindo Choudhury (Biology) is smitten. You can hear in his voice and see in his eyes that his is no ordinary love. It's a passion he self-deprecatingly describes as greedy.

The objects of Choudhury's affection have graceful curves and elegant features that he's captured in dozens, maybe hundreds, of photographs. Just say the word and he'll jump to share them.

"Aren't they beautiful?" Choudhury says, scrolling through a few of the photos on his computer.

He points to a particularly lovely specimen and adds, "It looks like a vase." He pronounces that last word with the sophisticated "ah" befitting an objet d'art.

The objet in question? An Asian fish tapeworm, viewed up close and personal with a scanning electron microscope that sees topographical detail on the micron level.

The images are indeed beautiful in their own way. But for Choudhury, the beauty of fish parasites is more than topography-deep.

"The beauty also comes from the fascination with the way they live," he says. "The point of parasitism is to be invisible, to thrive and flourish without being noticed. It's a very delicate game – a dance, a duet – that's going on between the host and the parasite."

So far, he's spent nearly two decades studying that dance from many angles, and in many creatures. His subjects have included flatworms, flukes, tapeworms and spiny-headed worms, but roundworms "remain my first love," Choudhury says.

Choudhury has collaborated with parasitologists from Mexico to Manitoba and California to the Czech Republic to understand the myriad factors that make parasitic relationships work. "The overarching question that I'm interested in is, why do certain parasites belong with certain hosts? Why are they together, in space and in time? Why are they together now, and how did they come to be together? In order to answer those questions, you have to go beyond just one type of research."

He's certainly done that. During his career, he has rafted the Little Colorado River with National Wildlife Health Center parasitologist Rebecca Cole to explore the effect of changing river temperatures on the distribution of the Asian fish tapeworm; taken undergraduates to Panama in further pursuit of the same parasite; collaborated with other students to name new Wisconsin tapeworm species; and served as associate editor of the Journal of Parasitology, one of the field's top three journals worldwide. And it all began with interests that took hold in boyhood and didn't let go.

This image, like those on the previous pages, was taken using differential interference contrast microscopy, a technique that gives the specimen its three-dimensional appearance. This composite of several merged images at different planes of focus shows a stained preparation of a newly discovered species of parasitic fish fluke, found in the intestines of suckers in Wisconsin. This specimen, about 2 mm long, is part of work undertaken by Anindo Choudhury (Biology) as a summer research collaboration with University of Minnesota science grad Shane Burruss.

As a young child, Choudhury moved from his Austrian mother's homeland to his father's native India. On his walk to school, he recalls seeing people with hugely swollen legs. When he asked his mother about them, she explained elephantiasis and its cause – the transmission of parasitic filaria larva to humans by mosquitos. He was fascinated.

A few years later, his father taught him to fish, and he fell in love with angling and all things fish-related. Eventually, his dual interests came together.

He got a bachelor's degree in zoology at the University of Burdwan in India and a master's in marine parasitology at the University of New Brunswick. Then a portion of Choudhury's doctoral research at the University of Manitoba established a connection to northeast Wisconsin long before he came to live there.

Choudhury studied the parasites of Lake Winnebago sturgeon when Lake Winnebago was little more to him than a sizable blue oval on a map. The sturgeon used in his research were frozen and shipped to him by Ron Bruch, a Wisconsin Department of Natural Resources sturgeon expert.

"I actually named a parasite after him. It's a fluke found in sturgeon in Wisconsin," Choudhury says.

This is high praise from a parasitologist. A Brazilian post-doctoral colleague of Choudhury's similarly honored him, naming a new stingray tapeworm genus Anindobothrium in a nod to what may be Choudhury's boldest experiment.

At work late one night, Choudhury, then a doctoral student in Manitoba, discovered live larvae in the flesh of pike harvested from a remote Canadian lake. Studying the larvae under a microscope, he believed them to be Diphyllobothrium latum, the human broad tapeworm.

While every parasitologist is familiar with D. latum, a parasitic rock star used to illustrate the tapeworm life cycle in both introductory and advanced textbooks, few have ever seen it live. And this human-borne parasite certainly didn't belong in an uninhabited Canadian wilderness. Could the larvae really be D. latum?

Absent the molecular tools he needed to answer the question, there was only one way for Choudhury to find out: give the larval parasite a human home in which to grow up.

The next day Choudhury swallowed three small chunks of raw, larvae-infested pike with chocolate milk. "Tapeworms love sugar," Choudhury says. "I wanted to make the transition comfortable for them. I had to give them a head start."

Choudhury's TLC did the trick. For five years, the parasite thrived in his gut. He collected specimens periodically, preserved them in 100 percent ethanol and, years later, collaborated with St. Norbert undergraduates to study the samples' molecular genetics.

While not all of his collaborative projects with students are as personal as this one, he relishes his work with undergraduates. "I wish instead of writing about me you could write about all of the students I've had," he says. "It's why I came here. I wanted to engage these bright young minds in something I'm really passionate about and I enjoy. Don't you think it's much more fun if you enjoy something with somebody rather than by yourself? It's infectious. My excitement and passion rub off on them, and theirs rub off on me. We just feed off one another." ♣

Honored

Each year, St. Norbert College is privileged to recognize a few among its many outstanding alumni. This year's winners, honored at a celebratory dinner in October, were (left to right) Marybeth Gasman '90, Jay Everard '74, the Rev. Domenic Rossi, O.Praem., '70 and Tyler Thomas '10. Find out how you can nominate an alum for next year's awards at www.snc.edu/alumni/awards.

Introducing the 2013 Alumni Awards Recipients

Distinguished Achievement in Education

Marybeth Gasman '90 has earned her place as a leading authority in the history of American higher education, and of historically black institutions specifically. A professor of education at the University of Pennsylvania, she has earned the Excellence in Teaching Award and is currently overseeing the dissertation work of 21 students. She serves organizations from the Lumina and Kresge foundations to the White House Initiative on Historically Black Colleges & Universities. She says, "I've had many mentors in my life and to each of them I promised to pay it forward."

Distinguished Achievement in Public Service

At The Private Client Reserve at U.S. Bank, Gerard "Jay" Everard '74 has earned the respect not just of his clients and company, but of the business community in Madison and beyond. He has served extensively as a coach of youth soccer, Little League baseball and boys' basketball, teaching youngsters athletic skills along with sportsmanship and teamwork. His life includes service to his parish, diocese, the St. Vincent DePaul Society, Edgewood High School, Meriter Hospital, the United Way and Rubin for Kids.

Alma Mater Award

When the Rev. Domenic Rossi, O.Praem., '70 founded Bethesda Project in Philadelphia in 1979, he did so in response to the message of the prophet Isaiah, to "share your bread with the hungry, and shelter the oppressed and the homeless." His organization began modestly, renting a former rooming house to provide shelter for a small group of homeless women. The goal was to "provide family to those who have none." Today, Bethesda serves thousands of homeless men and women each year, coordinates hundreds of volunteers (including many St. Norbert students, through the TRIPS program) and provides living-wage jobs to more than 100 people.

Young Alumni Award

After graduating from St. Norbert, Tyler Thomas '10 returned to his old school, Green Bay East, to teach math and co-coach boys' soccer. He began a club program for disadvantaged youth in the area, offering scholarships and soliciting donations for equipment and tournament costs. That organization, Allouez Ice, is thriving, with Thomas' teams winning all three tournaments they participated in during 2012. Thomas himself was named Wisconsin Youth Soccer's Boys' Coach of the Year.

At home with Louisa May

Stefanie Jochman '07, a devotee of “Little Women” author Louisa May Alcott, was applying to present at a conference held at Alcott’s home when she noticed the name of another St. Norbert alumna on the list of previous attendees.

Jochman and Kathleen Harsy '03 had just missed one another at St. Norbert. But, “on a whim,” Jochman decided to email Harsy. Harsy readily offered advice about the Summer Conversational Series, held every year in Concord, Mass. Jochman says: “Over the next few months, she offered a copy of her proposal, chatted with me about the conference application, and was a great source of encouragement.

“Imagine my delight when I learned that not only would I be presenting at the conference, but that Kathleen would be returning as well!”

The two met in person for the first time at Orchard House (longtime home of Alcott and her father, the influential 19th-century thinker Bronson Alcott). Convening around the theme “Chaos, Cosmos, and the Oversoul,” conference attendees investigated the influence of transcendental philosophy on Louisa May’s life and writing. Jochman presented on the influence of Ralph Waldo Emerson in “Little Women,” while Harsy considered the influence of transcendentalists like Bronson and Henry David Thoreau on the development of a modern-day garden project.

Both alums now work as high-school English teachers – Jochman at Green Bay’s Notre Dame Academy in Green Bay and Harsy at Riverside Brookfield (Ill.) High School (where the garden project unfolded.)

Preaches It

The Rev. Stephanie McCarthy is pastor of family ministries at Calvary Lutheran Church in Willmar, Minn. She’s not the only minister in the family: Her husband, the Rev. Seth Novak, serves at Our Redeemer’s Lutheran Church in Benson and Shepherd of the Hills in Swift Falls.

The toughest job I’ve ever loved When “Pastor” is in front of your name, you’re invited into people’s lives in a really deep and special way. We do see a lot of darkness, but we’re also invited in for the moments of greatest joy.

Modern prophesy Preaching is God’s work, not mine. I tremble before it. The day you step up to the pulpit and are not quaking inside is the day you should get the heck out.

Other duties as assigned If you’re the first person to arrive on Sunday morning and there’s a bat in the sanctuary, you’re going to have to deal with it.

Text message One of the verses I come back to is the shortest in the Bible, when Lazarus died. John 11:35: “Jesus wept.”

Daily devotions made easy 3-Minute Retreat from Loyola Press. You can have an online retreat at your desk before you start your day.

On the seventh day Now that four years of seminary are over, it’s really fun to read again. Long bike rides, especially with my husband, are good. I played clarinet in the wind ensemble at St. Norbert. There’s a community band here, and I do that when I can.

Uncovering the law of the land

Beware the brief conversation with a book publisher. Michael Ariens '79 had just such an encounter with former Texas Tech University Press editor Noel Parsons following a presentation to the Texas State Historical Association (TSHA) in 2004. The conversation sent Ariens on a seven-year quest to document the history of law in Texas.

"It happened that Noel was at my talk, and he came up afterward and asked if I had ever thought of writing a history of Texas law," Ariens recalls. "I hadn't. It turned out to be even more interesting than I thought it would be."

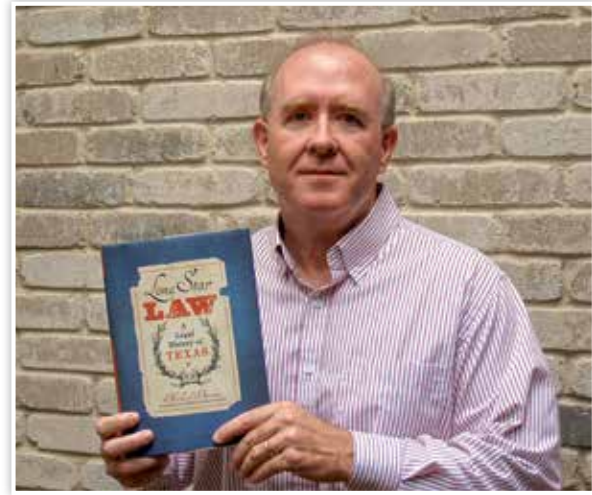

His resulting work, "Lone Star Law: A Legal History of Texas," has garnered multiple positive reviews since its release in 2011. The book earned the TSHA's Coral Horton Tullis Memorial Prize for the best book on Texas history, and the Ray and Pat Browne Award for Best Reference/Primary Source Book from the Popular Culture Association/American Culture Association.

"It was an enjoyable project and process," says Ariens, a 26-year resident of Texas who serves as professor of law and director of faculty scholarship at St. Mary's University in San Antonio. "It was kind of fun and a nice thing to be able to say I did."

Ariens, who is married to Renee (Ingrassia) Ariens '79, is a prolific writer who has authored articles as long as 100,000 words, as well as law books and case books. "Lone Star Law" is his first long-form history book, and at 350 pages it offers an extensive look at more than a century of evolving legal standards in Texas.

"Texans are very proud of their unique history," Ariens says. "One of the most interesting aspects is, although there are a number of unique features of Texas law, there also are a number of places where Texas simply borrowed law from other states. You get a sense of how much people listened to what the general approach is across the country, even in times when communication was slower than it is today."

Ariens uncovered a great deal of information in the state archives in Austin, about 90 minutes north of his home in San Antonio. Organizing the book's chapters evolved over the course of the project as additional information came to light. The first chapter he wrote eventually became Chapter 6, while the final chapter completed became Chapter 3 in the final version.

The first two chapters are chronological, beginning with the origins of Texas and continuing through about 1920. Chapters 3-8 focus on specific subject areas such as the history of property rights, the legal profession, morals laws and civil rights. Each chapter includes subheadings that allow for more piecemeal reading.

"I constantly had to think about whether I said something earlier in the book or not," Ariens says of his writing journey. "When I referred to something, I had to check that I didn't lose the initial reference. I tried to make sure I still had a narrative that people could enjoy."

Despite the book's 220,000 words, Ariens was somewhat frustrated that the publisher asked him to edit about 60,000 words from his original manuscript. "It is the first book on the history of Texas law, and I hope I have set a relatively high standard for any future books that cover the same field," he says. "The publisher suggested there should be a second volume, so I'm now focusing on the history of the American legal profession and its ethical standards – and does it have any?"

Ariens credits his parents, Mike '53 and Mimi Ariens, for encouraging his interest in general history at a young age. That interest turned into a passion for legal history, which he now shares with his students. "I wanted to learn how different things worked, and I was lucky enough to have parents who would buy books and encourage my interest in learning things," Ariens says. "Understanding how things came to be is helpful in understanding why certain laws are the way they are today."

MOB LAW

Texas was plagued by a lynch mentality in the late 1800s that largely was race-based. As Michael Ariens '79 discovered, formal law enforcement was nearly nonexistent.

"There were no useful prisons and no real law enforcement," Ariens says. "People were taking the law into their own hands to try and change things. But by the 1880s, it had become a tool of racial intimidation. The governor finally pushed for an anti-lynching law, and Texas borrowed its law from North Carolina."

"The idea behind the law was, any law enforcement or public official found guilty would be stripped of office and face felony charges. The law also allowed the family of the victim to sue anyone it could find that participated in the lynching. Unfortunately, actual and ideal are often disparate in the law. There was only one case in which a jury did find there was a lynching, and it involved [the lynching of] a white Civil War veteran. No African American family that suffered from a lynching ever received an award in a civil case."

Comic turn

Peter Poplaski was the first student to be acquired by the young John Gordon (Art) after Gordon finished his graduate studies. Poplaski went on to work at Marvel Comics, where he eventually found a way to pay homage to his former teacher in the pages of a Spiderman comic book. The comic-strip inker included Gordon's name in the headline of a newspaper being read by an archenemy of the superhero. A selection of the warm-up sketches Poplaski generated to start his working day formed an exhibit at the Godschalx Gallery on campus this semester – and a copy of the vintage comic was on display alongside.

It's hard to top the photo ops that present themselves each fall. New students arriving; looked-for annual events like the regatta and Homecoming; and the snap of autumn in the air. Our photo gallery at snc.edu/magazine brings you all the color of the season.

We were energized by meeting futurist and economist Rebecca Ryan. The author was on campus Oct. 15 to inspire a city-wide conversation on ways communities can enhance their ability to recruit and retain the next generation of talent.

Young professionals, Ryan said, look to live in places that reflect issues that matter to them: issues like diversity, environmental responsibility and after-hours culture. Ryan stayed on to record an extended interview, which we share at youtube.com/stnorbertcollege.

The "Lost Alumni" percentage for St. Norbert beats the national norms of 5-10 percent for private schools, 10-12 percent for public. Out of 21,354 living St. Norbert alums (plus the 2,049 known to be deceased), there are only 893 for whom we have no current information. We'd love to be in touch with those folk: If you run into any of them anytime, please let them know we're looking for them!

Toy story

A new engineering toy designed with girl-appeal saw its Midwest launch on campus during SNC Day this fall. GoldieBlox inventor and Stanford engineering grad Debbie Sterling was on campus to speak at the event, and the floor of the newly opened Cassandra Voss Center (CVC) became a playspace as young visitors tried out the toy. Fifteen lucky winners got to take home a set of their own.

Anna Englund '14 worked with CVC staff to develop promotional materials for the event; the manufacturers of GoldieBlox were so impressed with the public relations effort that they asked if they could use the materials in their own marketing. (See page 12 for more on the CVC.)

Festival of Christmas is guaranteed to fill the Walter Theatre to the brim with the joys of the holiday season – but we'll be sure to save a seat for you. The popular annual treat features holiday favorites and showcases all our ensembles and musicians. The treats continue after the music ends: A special dessert reception follows the concert.

A parade worth remembering

It was 50 years ago this fall that two elephants marched in the Homecoming parade. The hefty guests, rented from the circus museum in Baraboo, Wis., performed to promote the Homecoming Queen bid of Kathy Murphy '66. It was a stunt that cost Murphy's sponsors, the Sigma Beta Kappa fraternity, $150 for the four-hour gig. The theme for the 1963 Homecoming festivities was "Moments to Remember." Half a century on, we have not forgotten this one! A press release dated Oct. 10, 1963, takes up the tale: "The city of De Pere is ordinarily a quiet residential town ... That quiet was interrupted along the river's west bank Thursday noon by the presence of elephants, military vehicles and a good old-fashioned hootenany [sic] – all part of the St. Norbert College Homecoming antics."

Answering the Challenge

St. Norbert College President's Report & Honor Roll of Donors 2012-13

Answering the Challenge

President Tom Kunkel

You've probably heard it before: If you want to make God chuckle, make a plan. And if you want to give him a real belly-laugh, make it a five-year plan.

That's never been truer than it is today, given a world changing so quickly that, in planning terms, five years is the new twenty. Consider my own line of work, higher education, which some days feels like it's being buffeted from all four directions at once. Anyone who tells you with a straight face that he knows what the landscape for colleges and universities will look like in five years might need a checkup between the ears.

Well, doctor, let me dust off my crystal ball.

First, however, let me say that I think the changes now roiling higher education do not represent something to be feared but something to celebrate. As we go forward, there will be a multiplicity of paths to what we call higher education, and this is a good thing. More people will have more access to advanced learning. They will have more flexibility in how they go about it, and in some instances it will be a good bit more affordable than it is today.

Given that the United States increasingly requires a workforce with post-secondary skills, these developments are critical.

But what will this brave new world look like?

Our traditional two- and four-year schools will continue to be the workhorses for public higher education. But as we are seeing, these institutions – in the face of tremendous financial, political and competitive pressures – already are adapting to the new educational order, making more kinds of classes available in more ways. And while this is a positive development in the main, it does come with some serious consequences – reduced student contact with full-time faculty, for instance; even larger enrollments in popular courses; and stress fractures in the tenure system.

We will continue to see a climb in the number of students electing to do their post-secondary education entirely online, or nearly so. Providers will be the next generation of for-profits as well as nonprofits (both public and private) that are moving their emphases to the virtual classroom.

In fact, one day soon students may be able to assemble a portfolio of classes from a wide range of colleges and universities in a kind of personalized baccalaureate program. With top universities investing heavily in massive open online courses, or MOOCs, I think it's only a matter of time before our accreditation agencies, under tremendous pressure, somehow sanction these emerging hybrid experiences.

Indeed, on that point, more college programs will offer a credential for a combination of conventional coursework and credit given for on-the-job experience, if the student can demonstrate true competence in that area.

Then, finally, there is the traditional liberal arts residential model – the St. Norbert Colleges of the world. I am confident we will continue to play an important and necessary role in higher education for a very long time. Nowhere else in higher education do you get the focused mission of a small institution, the intimate class settings and ready faculty mentoring, the sense of community, the expectation of engagement, the inspiring campus environment, and the rich humanistic experience, that you do at a liberal arts college.

Having said that, I believe just as strongly that in the future there will not be the need for all 1,700 or so traditional private colleges that the Department of Education says we now have. The next five to 10 years will see a great shaking out of these institutions, and the ones that already are on the financial margin or that fail to adapt to a modern educational environment will fall by the wayside.

So how do we guarantee that St. Norbert is one of those private colleges that not only survives but thrives?

To begin with, we must continue to do everything in our power to keep our experience affordable for any student who wants it, regardless of his or her economic background. That will take a combination of prudent fiscal management, finding revenue sources beyond traditional tuition, room and board, and providing even more financial aid. We are actively engaged on all those fronts.

The 2012-13 academic year saw the arrival of our largest – and smartest – incoming class ever, and the institution of a waitlist for qualified students. But the decline in the number of high school graduates in this region and increasing concerns about the cost of college are realities that are already driving us (and our peers) to be ever more proactive in meeting the growing challenges of recruitment. It's more crucial than ever that we deliver on all our promises to these students once they are here – and, especially that we offer a superior academic experience that will convert into good jobs and careers. We have an enviable track record on that score, and there's no reason that shouldn't be the case in the future. After all, when employers are surveyed as to the qualities they want in new employees, they say things like the ability to think critically, to adapt to shifting circumstances, to work collegially, to communicate, to make ethical decisions – all characteristics of a liberal arts education.

We must use any regional advantages and partnering opportunities that present themselves. There is no better example than our relationship with the Medical College of Wisconsin, whose Green Bay regional campus, set to open in 2015, will be located in our new Gehl-Mulva Science Center. The positive impact of this collaboration for St. Norbert is almost beyond calculation.

We must adapt our teaching to the digital environment. St. Norbert has always been justifiably proud of its commitment to student learning. But in a world where young people do much of that learning in a digital context, we need to meet them where they live technologically.

Finally, we must be rock-solid about our values. We need to be able to articulate them clearly and then demonstrate every day that we live them. In the end, that is apt to be the biggest differentiator between schools that endure and those that don't.

Put another way, institutions such as St. Norbert can be greater than ever as we move forward, building on our current position as one of the top 10 Catholic schools among America's best national liberal arts colleges (as ranked by U.S. News & World Report).

But only if we're smart. And only if we continue to earn your support.

The simple fact is, tuition alone will never cover everything it takes to provide the resources, services and amenities our community needs. That's why we are currently engaged in Full Ahead: Campaign St. Norbert, with its target of raising $90 million by 2016. Your gifts to the college totaled more than $22 million in the fiscal year just concluded, a generosity that is, frankly, inspirational. When you provide scholarships, when you endow professorships, when you name a new science classroom, when you make your annual contribution to the St. Norbert Fund at a level that works for you, you not only express confidence in today's St. Norbert College. You join us in ensuring that tomorrow's will be here, going strong – educating the next generation of Green Knights.
